

workforce center

emergency training benefits community

The Regional Workforce Training Center guaranteed that the community's concerns and needs would be properly handled and resolved. Students, local employers, and the general community were gifted with short-term, non-credit training by the center. Economic prosperity grew exponentially due to a range of programs such as Emergency Medical Technician and Law Enforcement Academy creating necessary jobs. In addition to career-oriented training, the Workforce Training Center also offered certification classes, some of which were resume writing and interviewing skills seminars. Individuals were given the chance to earn high school credentials while working toward career certification through the MIBEST project. As the program progressed, additional assistance was made available to students who faced struggles in their efforts.

A great number of events that were beneficial to the community were hosted at the Workforce Training Center, and the facility impacted the local job growth significantly. The unemployed gained valuable training, and the economy was invigorated as a result of the job fairs. The center proved to be an asset for those who earned certifications and individualized training as they connected with leaders to better their community.

by Madison VanNess

above: Leicha Magee creates a document; top left: Cynthia Walker reads the Student Handbook online; opposite page: Kathrine Brumfield watches as Austin White listens to Kaeleb Carithers' heart beat; above right: Stefan Stegall checks the patient's pulse.

